International Conference
Succeeding in Emerging and Developing Markets
3 - 7 June 2008
Washington, USA

The majority of traditional Western business curriculum is founded on theory and research generated in developed countries, where political, economic, legal, and social institutions generally are formalized, well-developed, and stable. But MNCs increasingly are setting their sights on developing and emerging countries for future growth potential, where the institutional context is quite different. In these markets, international institutions play a prominent role, and local institutions are often informal, weakly formalized, in transition—or even non-existent. This workshop is designed to equip international business educators with an in-depth understanding of how institutions shape the strategies that firms employ and the actions that managers take in developing and emerging countries.

The Speakers include representatives from:

- United States Agency for International Development (USAID)
- The World Bank
- International Finance Corporation (IFC)
- Transparency International
- Ashoka
- Emerging and developing country governments
- Businesses with experience in emerging markets and developing countries
- Universities and research institutes specializing in a number of functional areas and disciplines

The Program includes presentations on:

- "What are Institutions? Why are they important for Development?"
- Ambassadors' Roundtable: "Challenges & Opportunities of Institutional Reform"
- Interactive Case Discussions: "The Shakedown," "The Untouchable Watercarrier," and "BRAC and Arrong Brands"
- "How to Use the World Bank's 'Doing Business In' Indicators in the Classroom"

- "The Role of Business in Conflict and Peace"
- NGO Manager Panel: "Building Sustainable Environments in Developing Countries"

The Participants

Get the tools you need to make and impact on your students in the classroom and in their lives. Learn about the institutional realities facing practitioners and policymakers in developing and emerging countries and the latest scholarly research findings in this area. Gain hands-on experience with various teaching materials, including cases, videos, and in-class and internet exercises that will help you better prepare your students for success in developing and emerging markets. Connect with academics and practitioners from a broad range of subject areas that share your goals and interests.

Emerging Multinationals: Outward Foreign Direct Investment from Emerging and Developing Economies
9 - 10 October 2008
Copenhagen, Danmark

Multinational companies from emerging and developing economies (EMNCs) are becoming major players in the globalized world economy and are likely to wield growing influence on economic dynamics in OECD, emerging, and developing countries alike. Host OECD countries will increasingly need to engage with the array of challenges and opportunities presented by emerging-economy multinationals seeking access to their markets and assets. A number of recent high-profile and controversial cases illustrate that the ascent of EMNCs onto the world stage will not necessarily be entirely without frictions.

Yet, in spite of the media attention towards investments into the OECD, important immediate impacts of outward direct investment from emerging and developing economies (OFDI) are likely to be felt also in developing host countries, where investments from other emerging and developing economies constitute more and more important complements to investment flows from OECD countries (South-South investments). No less important will be the effects in the home countries of the outward investing firms themselves. The contemporary rise of outward investment from emerging and developing countries remains insufficiently analyzed, both empirically and theoretically.

Topics:

The emergence of MNCs from emerging and developing economies raise a wide range of challenges for theorists, business strategists, and policymakers alike, for example:

- Why do companies from emerging and developing economies (EMNCs) invest abroad, how do they do it and which challenges do they face?

- How do EMNCs impact on different types of host economies? How are costs and benefits distributed? How are benefits captured? Which new policy challenges do they introduce?
- How are home economies affected by the internationalization of domestic firms? Should home countries pursue particular policies to accelerate or otherwise influence their OFDI?
- Which internationalizations patterns and strategies do EMNCs pursue? Are these qualitatively different from what we know from the received literature?
- How does EMNC behavior vary between different industries and why?
- How does the rise of EMNCs influence global competition in different industries?
- Do EMNCs differ from industrialized-country MNCs in terms of corporate governance and corporate social responsibility?
- How are companies from China and India in particular coming to internationalize their operations?
- Which are the roles of state-owned EMNCs?

Important dates:

Submission of short abstract: 15 May 2008

Submission of full paper: 1 July 2008

Paper acceptance/rejection: 1 August 2008

Submission of revised paper: 1 September 2008

Submission:

Submitted papers will be subject to a double-blind review process. The best papers will be considered for publication in a journal special issue or an edited book volume. Please email your paper as an MS Word or PDF document to Peter Gammeltoft (pg.int@cbs.dk). The names, affiliations, and contact information of all authors should be noted only on a separate cover page.

Accepted papers will be uploaded to an ‘electronic proceedings’ on the conference website.

Registration fee:

Due to the generous financial support extended by the conference sponsors there is no conference fee for presenters but registration is necessary. Food and refreshments will be provided by the conference.

International Conference
Restructuring Management in the Processes of Integration and Development of the New Economy
15 - 18 October 2008
Krynica, Poland

The 13th International Scientific Conference is organized by The Department of Economics and Organization of Enterprises at The Cracow University of Economics acting in cooperation with the University Foundation. This year's conference under the motto: "Restructuring Management in the Processes of Integration and Development of the New Economy" will be held at Recreational Centre "PANORAMA" in Krynica, from 15 to 18 October 2008.

The onset of the 21st century is the time of ubiquitous information revolution and the growing importance of intangible assets be currently viewed as the attributes of so called "new economy". It is also the period of continually increasing dynamics of changes in economic surrounding and raising the significance of intellectualizing economic processes. Thus arises the necessity of seeking new management tools to improve management effectiveness and to face the competition. All processes of expanding economic, social and political integrity foster markets to be more open, which results in dynamic growth of competitiveness. The growing intensity of these processes make market participants constantly search for active ways of building and maintaining their competitive advantage.

It is the turbulent and highly dynamic surrounding which makes competitive advantage, gained at a given moment, relative and time rendered, that is, relevant at specific time and place and with specific entities, yet likely to be easily lost within the time passing. Hence the need of constant development and search for new enterprise solutions. It may be said that contemporary enterprises, especially those which aim at gaining market leadership, are in the state of "permanent escapism", always bound to be ready for responding to new challenges or radical changes of actions.

The leading idea of this year conference will be the attempt to characterize the potential of using restructuring actions in the process of building global competitiveness of enterprises in the conditions of growing integration processes, as well as to scrutinize new challenges pertaining to growing importance and impact of the new economy.

In order to achieve the above objectives, the formula of this conference will be an extension of the last year's one. We do hope that thanks to this it will be possible to combine the accomplishments of the academic milieu with practical entrepreneurial experience, as well as to confront Polish experience with that of other countries.

International Conference
Consulting and Management in Central and Eastern Europe
6 November, 2008
Berlin, Germany

Although management consulting originally emerged in the US, it became a widespread business activity all over the world, and more recently also in Central and Eastern Europe (CEE). From a CEE perspective, management consultancies are often supposed to be carriers of global best practices across national borders. From the perspective of West European consulting firms, the transformation of CEE countries after 1989 opened up new opportunities for their own transnational expansion. Critical observers see this expansion as a central element in the hegemonial production and diffusion of managerial ideology, while others emphasise the impossibilities of 'knowledge transfer', which they base on theories of implicit knowledge and cultural diversity.

The potential for transferring knowledge and concepts depend on the homogeneity of the targeted countries, as well as on the similarity between countries of origin and target countries. Management consulting has traditionally tended to assume a high degree of transferability. It's an open question whether, and if so how, Western consulting firms adapt to local circumstances, problems, and knowledge, and to what extent the demand for consulting services articulates that. Research into this process of transformation has argued that the parameters specific to CEE have to be taken into account seriously. Yet, despite the fact that 'managerial learning' in transformation processes has been an important issue in previous research, scholars have paid attention only occasionally to the role of consultants in countries that have been through economic transformation and to the effects of consultants on the development of managerial competencies, world-views, and professional identities.

Thus, management consulting in CEE might require different models of client interaction and intervention. Strategic options on how consultancies could implement such models as part of their expansion strategies include:

founding own establishments and complementing their staff with local personnel; buying a local firm, utilising its human and customer capital; cooperating with local firms, which themselves might profit from the symbolic capital of Western firms (at least, if those firms are not known as brands, local firms could capitalise on the appeal of their Western origin). Practically, large players, mainly of US origin, are already internationalised, using all these options, while among small and medium-size consulting firms most still follow their clients abroad.

We know little about management consulting in, and targeted at, CEE countries and their emerging consulting markets. More specifically, the perspectives of clients in CEE remain unexplored. Thus, for the purposes of this special issue and conference, we encourage particularly the participation of academics from different disciplines with an interest in the topics of consulting, management, or internationalisation and a special focus on CEE. We would welcome empirical as well as theoretical contributions dealing with issues such as (the list is not exhaustive):

- The role of Western or ‘global’ management consultancies in different phases of CEE transformation and their impact on different issues, such as economic regulation and policies, privatisation, and industry and/or company restructuring.
- Internationalisation strategies of (small and/or large) Western consulting firms targeting the CEE: market entry, market penetration, client structure and major consulting issues.
- Relevance and characteristics of West–East consultancy partnerships: are they mutually supportive or unilaterally exploitative?
- Local CEE consulting markets and profiles/strategies of domestic consulting firms.
- Characteristics of the client–consultant interaction in CEE countries.
- Evidence and explanations for divergent developments in consulting and management learning in specific CEE countries.
- Substantiated analyses of opportunities and risks, as well as successes and failures of West European consultants in CEE markets.
- Alternatives or functional equivalents to external and commercial consulting in CEE (e.g. the development of in-house consulting units).
- Strategies and organisational measures that CEE clients could adopt for dealing with consultants (e.g. purchasing, managing, evaluating consultancies).

Submission process:

- 1. Extended abstract (500 words) must be submitted by 1st August 2008 to consulting@tu-chemnitz.de
- 2. Authors will be informed about the acceptance of their paper until 15th August 2008
- 3. Full papers (first draft) must be submitted to consulting@tu-chemnitz.de by 31st October 2008.
- 4. Submitted papers must be accompanied by a cover letter stating that the author permits the publication of his or her paper, if accepted, either in part or in its entirety in the Journal for East European Management Studies (JEEMS). The letter should also state that the paper submitted to the special issue of JEEMS has not been previously published either in part or in its entirety.
- 5. Papers that pass successfully the double-blind review process will be accepted for publication in the JEEMS special issue. Selected papers which have not been accepted for the special issue will be included in the conference transcript. The paper must conform to the author guidelines of JEEMS (please see ‘Guidelines for Authors’: <http://www.tu-chemnitz.de/wirtschaft/bwl5/jeems/guide.htm>).

Special Issue

National and Organisational Cultures: Their Interaction in the Baltic Region

Deadline: 7 July 2008

In the course of the last two decades the Baltic States have experienced momentous economic, political, and social transformations: from command to market economy, from externally imposed dictatorship to independence and democracy, from inclusion in the Soviet socioeconomic system to integration into the European Union. After initial precipitous economic decline, the Baltic region has more recently experienced substantial economic growth, and has been increasingly affected by the worldwide trends toward modernization and globalization. What has been the impact of these developments on the composite of values, policies and practices of Baltic corporations, private businesses, and public institutions that is commonly subsumed within the concept of organizational culture? What are the distinctive characteristics of organizational cultures, if any, within the three Baltic States and how do they interact with those of the more inclusive national cultures of the three countries? In what ways are they similar to or different from the organizational cultures of other nations in Europe and elsewhere? These are some of the questions that authors are invited to address in submitting papers for this Special Issue. A wide range of approaches and methods is welcomed. Comparative, cross-national, and interdisciplinary perspectives are strongly encouraged, and submissions are solicited both from within and outside the Baltic States.

Topics for the Special Issue include, but are not limited to:

- Decision making within organizations
- Concentration vs. dispersion of authority
- Structure and configuration of organizations
- Values and their reflection in management practices
- Change and constancy, especially during periods of rapid transformation
- Strategic planning vs. improvisation
- Leadership philosophies, practices, and styles
- Management-employee relations
- Customer relations
- Public relations and image management
- Relationship to national culture

- Relationship to dimensions of cultures
- Conflict management and resolution
- Integration vs. alienation
- Pessimistic vs. optimistic expectations

All papers submitted will be peer-reviewed and accepted papers will be published in a special edition of the BJM. Papers should be electronically submitted to the Baltic Journal of Management by July 7, 2008, with a cover letter indicating that the paper is intended for the special edition. Details about preparing and submitting papers are available at Baltic Journal of Management website: <http://www.emeraldinsight.com/bjm.htm>.

Please submit the papers to:

Journal of Organizational Change Management

Special Issue

Movement of Transition 20 Years on: Identities, Ideologies, Imaginary Institutions

Deadline: 1 September 2008

The demise of the bureaucratic Soviet type state socialism and the transition to (or rather reinstitution of) the free market in Central and Eastern Europe has been one of the most pivotal and challenging societal events of the past two decades. Drastic social transformations, set in motion by the disintegrating Soviet model (and its variants) have succeeded in firmly establishing a ‘liberalist fantasy' (De Cock/Böhm, 2007) as the dominant narrative in contemporary public discourse. Reflecting the Zeitgeist, market rhetoric of 'freedom' and 'choice' has been unanimously embraced as an antidote to the alleged inefficiency and irresponsiveness of state bureaucracies in East and West. Presented as a superior form of social organization, the 'free market' has captured the minds of its allies and foes alike, becoming elevated to the status of the new master signifier (Fotaki, 2008).

In this special issue we would like to explore the ideologies embedded in prevailing discourses of transition – or what Buck-Morss (2002) calls (qua Walter Benjamin) 'dreamworlds'. That is, we wish to question the individual and social processes of ideology and imagination extant within the institutional arrangements of both East and West. For us, the transition to a free market society is bound up with a host of dream-like imaginations of social and economic progress (which were also found on the imaginary horizon of the Soviet system). In this sense, what we see is not a transition toward real freedom or democracy, but simply a transition from one socio-economic dreamworld to another.

The Call:

With such an ambitious scope our Call is open to a variety of theoretical and empirical contributions. However we wish the contributions to this special issue to extend beyond either micro-political analyses or the presentation of case studies confined to national or sectoral contexts. This aim of this Call is to reflect critically on the different histories and identities of transition, problematize the direction of change and its seeming inevitability, and establish possibilities for alternative articulations. We particularly invite conceptual work that questions the utilitarian premises running through the grand narratives and dreamworlds of state socialism and market liberalism. Empirically, we welcome studies that interrogate identities of transition on a variety of levels – personal, institutional and societal – and discuss networks of power and resistance running through identities and subjectivities in a variety of contexts. We emphasize the need to go beyond the variations of Foucauldian 'micro-political' studies of organization and identity that have been so popular in our field in recent times. For us, identities in a transition context can never just involve micro-political settings within limited boundaries of organizations, firms and institutions. Rather, we wish to make sense of wider change processes, involving identities that are bound up with individual as well as social and collective imaginations and desires.

Hence, we would like to invite contributions that problematize, re-think and re-define movements of transition, particularly addressing:

- The historical epoch of social transformation from what was known as ‘real existing socialism’ to today’s (post-)transition market economies – examining and evaluating the identities and ‘dreamworlds’ bound up with this change process;
- Theoretical papers presenting counterintuitive and provocative analyses and ideas of transition using a range of frameworks (e.g. feminist, post-colonial, neo-Gramscian, post-Marxist, post/Foucauldian, post-structuralist, psychoanalytic and other novel approaches);
- Empirical analyses examining and evaluating the human, social, cultural and economic costs involved in transition, focussing particularly on the processes of identity formation and reformation.
- Significance of social and organizational transformations in light of foreclosed and recreated opportunities for radical movements of transition;
- The roles of, and the relationships between, the state, economy and civil society in organizing societal transitions and change processes, focusing particularly on the role of organizations (e.g. NGOs, charities, affinity groups, direct action groups, media organizations) and counter cultural discourses by various groups (women, minorities, ethnic groups and immigrants) in facilitating hegemonic as well as counter-hegemonic transitions;
- The modes of organization in what can be regarded as transitions toward alternative ‘dreamworlds’.
