Foreword

This volume is the result of a common and truly international and European effort of, in alphabetical order, the Law Faculties of the Universities of Augsburg (Germany) and Ljubljana (Slovenia). A couple of years ago, the two institutions decided to organize a series of common seminars and conferences on contemporary issues of international law, broadly understood, under the helm of the two editors of this volume.

The general outset of the series is two conferences on a common topic held at the two institutions, for which internationally renowned experts as well as younger scholars are invited to present and discuss imminent problems of international law. The first series of lectures was devoted to the protection of human rights in international and national settings and received a very positive response from the participants, which encouraged us to proceed with the preparation of an edited volume of further developed ideas, first presented at the two conferences. We do sincerely hope that the volume is useful in stirring discussions and offering new insights in understanding, interpretation, application and enforcement of human rights.

The editors would like to wholeheartedly thank everyone who made the publication possible. This means first of all the participants of the conferences for their contributions and their time spent on preparation of the chapters of this volume. Secondly, the support from Natasha Thomson, LL.B. (Hons., Aberdeen) and Monika Reka Kriss, LL.B. (Hons., Exeter) in proofreading and editing cannot be overestimated. Further thanks have to go to the publishing houses, it is a special privilege for us that leading international law publishers were interested in the publication of this volume and to the Augsburg Center for Global Economic Law and Regulation for its financial support.

We hope that the publication proves to be useful to the readers.
